Original Home Dressmaking Designs By The Evening World's Fashion Expert

By Mildred Lodewick.

One incluous turning of fashion for the American moman is the tendency for elaboration on frocks. Racially, the American woman does not look well when befurbelowed with foolish triffes There is something about their strong, intelligent faces, their peculiarly confident stride and their whole independent manner which ill befits too gentle colorings and coquettish styles. This does not mean, however, that our women canot wear duinty frocks and trimmings of ruffies, bown and flowers, but the handng of them must be done judicious y, and not in a way to suggest the usey attire of a Dreeden doll Organdy, with its sheer crisp quality, makes an ideal fabric for frocks where youthful flares and piquant frills are dealred, but for the matron who cannot stand the exaggerated outline which this fabric gives, there is noft Georgette crope, batiste, voile is soft Georgette crepe, batists, volle and net.

Any one of these materials could be used to develop the attractive design I am showing to-day, whose simple dignity makes it as suitable to the matron as the maid.

As depicted at the left, plain net is combined with lace flouncing in an effective way. A plain foundation waist of the net is finished around the pointed neck with ruffles, which jabot softly over a deep collar of lace. This collar is a very distinctive part of the frock, as it combines the effect of a cape and a fichu, so becoming to various types of women. In the back it is oddly silt up a ways as if only to give reason for the chic little ribbon bow which finishes it. A plain net sleeve offers three little ruffles to show daintily from under the cape, while on the skirt many ruffles play about the lower part, showing between wide points of the lace tunic. Three tiny cordings at the hip line serve to stach the tunic to the plain net skirt. At the right I have shown the front view of the design, with any pretty flowered or dotted material for its development, combined with the same sort of plain goods for the ruffles. In the front of the belt line an embroidered medallion or piece of heavy openwork lace adds a contrasting bit of trimming, next to the colored silk belt.

LIFE-SAVING BULLETIN

The opening advertisement in the 1916 life-saving campaign of the Long Island Railroad was headed with these words. They tell the story this railroad has been trying to drive home, through advertisements, signs, bells, whistles, watchmen, every device that could be thought of to end avoidable accidents at grade-crossings on Long Island forever. This is the second year that this aggressive campaign has been conducted. Though there were eleven injuries due to reckless driving last year, the campaign was, nevertheless, effective. Make 1916 show a clean record.

HUGHES ODDS STILL 8 TO 5.

Little Money Bet on Carb-Wile According to Edward McQuade, who handles most of the large commissions handles most of the large commissions on the Curb, there was absolutely no change yesterlay in the betting odds, following Col. Roosevelt's letter to the Progressives, from those which prevailed at the close of last week. The best that he could offer on Hughes was to 5, and he had only a few hundred dollars to place. The Wilson adherents, as on last Saturday, were still demanding 2 to 1, at which figure McQuade stated there was a considerable amount of money ready to be wagered.

The skin was sore and inflamed and the breaking out itched and burned which caused me to scratch and irritate the sore places and I could not sleep. My face was disfigured so that I could not go out and I was not able to work for three weeks.
